A DIGITAL GUIDE

The Exam Room Method

This is a method for courses and licensing exams. It replaces rereading with retrieval, and it will not promise a score.

Fill the blank plans with the syllabus in front of you. The guide does not know your subject.

> A note on limits. This guide describes methods. It cannot see your course, your calendar, or your life. Use what fits. Leave what does not. Nothing here guarantees a grade, a streak, or a particular outcome.

How to use this guide

Start with the next lecture or chapter, not with a reorganization of your entire notebook. Write questions the same day. Answer them at the next session before you consume anything new. That loop is the method. The rest of the pages help you schedule it.

- One subject first if you are tempted to redesign everything.
- Questions live apart from answers.
- A weekly plan with hours you actually have.
- Sleep treated as part of studying.

02

Why rereading fails

Rereading feels smooth because the page is familiar. Familiar is a check, not a memory you can produce when the page is gone. In the exam you get a question. Practice should look like that earlier than you want it to.

Close the book and write what you would say. If you cannot, you do not know it yet. The discomfort is the work. Highlighting can mark what to turn into a question. It is not itself studying.

> Try this. At the end of a session, write three questions you cannot yet answer. Those are the start of the next session.
